About Toraya

A maker of wagashi (traditional Japanese confections), Toraya was founded in the early 16th century in Kyoto where it became a purveyor to the imperial court during the reign of Emperor Goyozei, which ran from 1586 to 1611. Toraya established a foothold in Tokyo in 1869, after the national capital was transferred there on the heels of the Meiji Restoration. At present, Toraya has three factories and approximately 80 shops throughout Japan, in addition to a boutique in Paris.

Ingredients

The key element of wagashi is an, a paste typically made with beans and sugar. Azuki beans, in particular, have been integral to the Japanese diet and indispensable in wagashi-making, their auspicious reddish color considered in ancient folk belief to be effective in warding off disaster and disease. Toraya uses only plant-based products such as azuki beans, sugar, agar and rice flour for its wagashi, with the exception of eggs in some items.

Fresh Japanese Sweets

These highly artistic creations are typically served at tea ceremonies and special events. They are made with meticulous attention to flavor, seasonal motifs and, of course, visual beauty.
